QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether isolated age-related comments by a supervisor can be characterized as "direct evidence" of discriminatory intent in violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act where (1) the comments were made four years or more before the employer made the adverse decision forming the basis of the employee's complaints; (2) the supervisor did not participate in making the subsequent decision; (3) the comments were not relied on by those who made the decision; and (4) there is no other evidence suggesting a nexus between the comments and the subsequent decision.

2. Whether counsel's bare citation to deposition transcripts which were not made part of the record before the district court constitutes competent evidence sufficient to support a prima facie case of age discrimination under the McDonnell Douglas test and defeat a motion for summary judgment.

LIST OF PARTIES

In addition to The Mennen Company, a Nevada Corporation, the petitioners are The Mennen Company, a New Jersey Corporation, George S. Mennen, L. Donald Horne, Leonard J. Sichel, and William G. Scalia. In January of 1986, the time of the action complained of, Mr. Mennen was a Member of the Board of Directors, Mr. Horne was Chairman of the Board of Directors and Chief Executive Officer, Mr. Sichel was Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer, and Mr. Scalia was Vice President and Treasurer.

LIST OF PARENT COMPANIES AND SUBSIDIARIES

The Mennen Company, a New Jersey Corporation, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of The Mennen Company, a Nevada Corporation. All subsidiaries of The Mennen Company, a New Jersey Corporation, are wholly owned with the exception of Mennen France S.A. and Mennen Spa. The latter is an Italian company.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE THIRD CIRCUIT

The Mennen Company, et al. (hereinafter "The Mennen Company"), petition for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (App. A, infra, 1a-12a) is not reported. The opinions of the district court (Apps. B and C, infra, 13a-32a, 33a-39a) are not reported.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The opinion of the court of appeals (App. A, infra) was entered on February 27, 1990. The court denied a petition for rehearing on March 27, 1990 (App. D, infra, 40a-41a). Jurisdiction is conferred on this Court by 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS AND RULES INVOLVED

Section 4 of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 ("ADEA"), as amended, codified at 29 U.S.C.A. § 623 (1985 and Supp. 1990), provides in relevant part:

> (a) It shall be unlawful for an employer —
> > (1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's age; . . . .

Rule 10 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure provides, in relevant part:

> (a) Composition of the Record on Appeal. The original papers and exhibits filed in the district court, the transcript of proceedings, if any, and a certified copy of the docket entries prepared by the clerk of the district court shall constitute the record on appeal in all cases.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case arises from charges of age discrimination filed by Andrew S. Martin after The Mennen Company did not upgrade his position from Grade 14 to Grade 15 in January 1986. Martin was 61 years old and held the position of finance manager at the time of the adverse decision. The upgrade request was supported by Martin's supervisor, petitioner William C. Scalia, who twice put Martin's position in for an upgrade. Had the upgrade request been granted, Martin's job would have remained the same; however, he might have received a higher salary, a bigger bonus, and additional benefits. Apart from recommending the upgrade and providing relevant information, Mr. Scalia played no role in the decision to grant or deny it.

After filing discrimination charges with state and federal administrative agencies, Martin filed a complaint in New Jersey Superior Court alleging, inter alia, (1) disparate treatment based on the denial of the upgrade in 1986 and (2) a continuing violation of the ADEA stemming from the Company's salary evaluation system.

The Mennen Company removed Martin's state complaint to the United States District Court, District of New Jersey, which assumed jurisdiction pursuant to 29 U.S.C. § 626(c) and 28 U.S.C. § 1331. The matter was thereafter submitted to a United States Magistrate by agreement of the parties pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c)(1). On the first of two summary judgment motions heard by the magistrate, The Mennen Company secured a dismissal of Martin's continuing violation claim (App. B, infra). The dismissal was subsequently reversed by the court of appeals (App. A, infra, at 11a-12a). (The petitioners do not seek review of this ruling as its survival is dependent upon the continued validity of the other rulings challenged herein.) On the second motion, The Mennen Company secured summary judgment on Martin's disparate treatment claim, thus ending the case before the district court (App. C, infra).

The magistrate granted summary judgment on Martin's disparate treatment claim on grounds that Martin had failed to establish all elements of a prima facie case of age discrimination under the McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green test, 411 U.S. 792 (1973). In particular, the magistrate found that Martin had failed to offer evidence that younger employees in positions comparable to his were treated more favorably (see App. C, infra, at 37a-38a). Martin appealed the magistrate's rulings to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit as provided by 28 U.S.C. § 636(c)(3). The court of appeals reversed.

The court reversed the summary judgment entered on Martin's disparate treatment claim on grounds that "the magistrate erred by requiring the plaintiff to meet all prongs of the McDonnel[l]-Douglas v. Green test." (App. A, infra, at 2a). The court so held because it found that the record contained "direct evidence" of discrimination:

> The elaborate three prong test devised to assist plaintiffs with a lack of direct evidence is unnecessary in the case here, where there exists direct evidence to suggest an intent to discriminate. Several statements made by Martin's own supervisor suggest that age could have been a factor in the decision not to upgrade Martin's job. Statements such as: [1] "despite [his] age, he continues to work hard and put in long hours when necessary," and [2] "I don't expect you to work like a kid looking for a promotion," indicate that age could be a substantial factor in the decision made by Mennen. In addition, [3] Martin claims that his immediate supervisor, William Scalia, had > told him several times during performance reviews that the company treated younger employees more favorably in order to get them to remain in the company.

> . . . We conclude that the magistrate erred by requiring Martin to establish his prima facie case on the basis of the McDonnell-Douglas factors when there was direct evidence from which a reasonable jury could find discriminatory intent.

App. A, infra, at 8a-10a (footnote omitted). The first statement cited by the court is taken from a performance evaluation Scalia prepared in 1980, six years before the denial of the upgrade to Martin's position (see App. A, infra, at 4a). Scalia made the second statement in 1979, seven years before the denial of the upgrade (id.). The third statement, reported in Martin's answers to interrogatories, was allegedly made in 1982, four years before the denial of the upgrade (id.; see also, App. E, infra, at 42a-43a). Thus, the "direct evidence" relied on by the court comprises statements made four, six, and seven years before the adverse employment decision forming the basis of Martin's disparate treatment claim. In reciting this evidence, the court fails to mention that Scalia, the individual who made these comments, was responsible for requesting that Martin's position be upgraded in the first place (App. B, infra, at 16a; App. C, infra, at 36a) and that Martin offered no evidence that Scalia participated in making the decision to deny that recommendation.

In addition to relying on attenuated comments by a non-decisionmaker as "direct evidence", the court of appeals ruled that in any event the record before the district court contained evidence which satisfied the final prong of a prima facie case under the McDonnell Douglas test (App. A, infra, at 10a n.1). The court so ruled without addressing the magistrate's finding that there was no such evidence in the record before the district court (see App. C, infra, at 37a-38a).

The Mennen Company moved for rehearing and for rehearing in banc. The court denied the motion on March 27, 1990 (see App. D, infra).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

THE QUESTIONS SET FORTH HEREIN ARE IMPORTANT AND SHOULD BE RESOLVED BY THIS COURT.

In its decision below, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit revives an ADEA disparate treatment claim by elevating isolated age-related comments made outside the context of the subsequent adverse employment decision to the status of "direct evidence" of discriminatory intent. As an alternative basis for its ruling the court apparently overlooks important evidentiary rulings by the district court and accepts bare references to deposition transcripts which were not made part of the district court record as competent evidence supporting a prima facie case of age discrimination under the McDonnell Douglas test.

The court's rulings raise questions (see Questions Presented, supra) centering on a common issue: What constitutes competent evidence of discriminatory intent under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act? This issue is of central importance to all courts with jurisdiction to hear ADEA claims and to all parties engaged in litigation under the Act. As discussed below, infra, at 8-12, the ruling of the court of appeals with regard to direct evidence is in conflict with the rulings of other courts of appeals.

This Court should address the direct evidence question herein to prevent further confusion and inconsistencies in the administration of the ADEA.

This case also presents the Court with an opportunity to clarify the meaning of "direct evidence of discrimination" for purposes of Title VII and the ADEA. In her concurring opinion in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, ____ U.S. ____, 109 S. Ct. 1775 (1989), Justice O'Connor notes that the Court's decision in Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Thurston, 469 U.S. 111, 121 (1985), "seemed to indicate that 'the McDonnell Douglas test is inapplicable where the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination ,'" ____ U.S. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1802. Thus, although Price Waterhouse focuses on a mixed motive sexual discrimination claim under Title VII, it raises an important question about the effect of direct evidence on an ADEA claimant's burden of proof.

The instant case underscores the need for this Court's attention to the meaning of "direct evidence of discrimination." The opinion of the Price Waterhouse plurality notes that use of the present active tense in Title VII (as in the ADEA) requires courts to focus on the factors that influenced a disputed employment decision "at the moment it was made." ____ U.S. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1785 (emphasis as in the original). It further notes that stray remarks of a discriminatory nature do not prove discrimination at the critical moment. Apart from these comments, the opinion of the plurality refrains from illuminating the distinction between direct and indirect evidence of discrimination as this was unnecessary under the facts presented in that case. Id. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1791. The dissent warns that the plurality saddles the trial and appellate courts with the difficult task of developing standards for distinguishing direct and indirect evidence. Id. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1812. Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion appears to address that task by suggesting that the McDonnell Douglas test should not be set aside on the basis of "stray remarks in the workplace," "statements by nondecisionmakers," and "statements by decisionmakers unrelated to the decisional process itself."

In the instant case, the court of appeals has ignored Justice O'Connor's suggestions and relied for its decision on isolated statements (Scalia made the statements four, six, and seven years before the upgrade was denied) made by a non-decisionmaker (Scalia recommended that Martin's position be upgraded — he played no role in the decision to deny that recommendation) which bore no relation to the decisional process (none of Scalia's comments address the eligibility of Martin's position for an upgrade). Further, Martin offered no evidence to suggest that the decisionmaker had knowledge of, let alone relied on, these comments at the moment of decision. This case affords the Court an opportunity to examine conflicting standards of direct evidence and apply itself to the task it identified in Price Waterhouse.

II.

THE STANDARD OF DIRECT EVIDENCE APPLIED BY THE COURT OF APPEALS IS NOT IN ACCORD WITH STANDARDS APPLIED BY OTHER COURTS OF APPEALS.

Direct "smoking gun" evidence of intentional discrimination is seldom available to claimants alleging disparate treatment: Indeed, the rarity of direct evidence was an important rationale behind this Court's adoption of the framework of shifting evidentiary burdens outlined in McDonnell Douglas. See Price Waterhouse, ____ U.S. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1801-02 (O'Connor, J., concurring). Because direct evidence is rare, the courts of appeals have had few occasions to discuss how to distinguish direct evidence of discrimination from indirect evidence. Courts that have addressed the issue, however, agree that isolated age-related statements do not constitute direct evidence of discrimination. Rather, direct evidence is evidence which establishes a direct nexus between an employer's specific intent to discriminate and the adverse action taken against the employee. This nexus is wholly lacking from the evidence relied on by the court of appeals in this case.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has addressed the distinguishing characteristics of direct evidence of discrimination with greater clarity than any other court. In Carter v. City of Miami, 870 F.2d 578 (11th Cir. 1989), the court defined such evidence as follows: "Direct evidence of discrimination would be evidence which, if believed, would prove the existence of a fact without inference or presumption." Id. at 582. The Third Circuit and Eleventh Circuit agree that "[d]irect evidence would include statements by the employer to the employee that s/he was being fired because of age." Maxfield v. Sinclair Intern, 766 F.2d 788, 791 (3d Cir. 1985). Their standards differ, however, over the proper characterization of more attenuated evidence of discrimination.

In the instant case, the Third Circuit accepted evidence which "suggest[s] an intent to discriminate" as "direct evidence" of discrimination (App. A, infra, at 8a). Under the Eleventh Circuit's standard, however, "only the most blatant remarks whose intent could be nothing other than to discriminate on the basis of age" constitute direct evidence of discrimination. Carter, 870 F.2d at 582. Under this standard, an employer's comments that the company needed "new, young blood," his description of various employees as "old farts," "old bastards," "little old ladies," and "old cows," and his declarations during management meetings that "everyone over 35 should be sacked" were deemed to be not direct, but merely circumstantial evidence of a discriminatory animus underlying subsequent employment actions. Castle v. Sangamo Weston, Inc., 837 F.2d 1550, 1553, 1558 (11th Cir. 1988).

See also, Young v. General Foods Corp., 840 F.2d 825, 829 (11th Cir. 1988), cert. denied, ____ U.S. ____, 109 S. Ct. 782 (1989) (comments on age, while 'inappropriate and condescending", were not direct evidence of discrimination).

As in Castle, none of the age-related comments. charactarized as direct evidence by the court of appeals in the instant case were made in conjunction with the decision to deny an upgrade to Martin's position. Indeed, the record before the court of appeals showed that Scalia, the supervisor who made the age-related comments, recommended that Martin's position be upgraded and played no part in the decision to deny the upgrade. Under the Eleventh Circuit's standard, Scalia's isolated references to Martin's age four, six, and seven years before he put Martin's position in for an upgrade do not constitute direct evidence of discrimination, for a fact-finder could not connect Scalia's statements to the denial of the upgrade without employing "inference or presumption." Carter, 870 F.2d at 582. The possibility of a nexus between Scalia's comments and the upgrade denial is further attenuated by the fact that Scalia did not make the decision to deny the upgrade. Finally, Martin has presented no evidence that the decisionmaker had knowledge of Scalia's comments, let alone evidence that the decisionmaker, in Justice O'Connor's words, placed "substantial negative reliance" on Scalia's comments. Price Waterhouse, ____ U.S. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1805. Petitioners do not suggest that the absence of such evidence serves as a complete defense to Martin's disparate treatment claim. Rather, in the absence of such evidence, there is no direct evidence of discrimination, and Martin must prove his claim through the application of the McDonnell Douglas prima facie case test.

The practical necessity of a nexus between age-related comments and adverse employment actions becomes apparent upon considering how the jurisprudence of age discrimination would change were the nexus requirement relaxed. If past instances of discriminatory animus by non-decisionmakers are accepted as direct evidence of discrimination at the moment of a subsequent employment decision, the McDonnell Douglas framework no longer applies to the class of ADEA plaintiffs comprising employees of companies which have engaged in or been cited for discriminatory practices in the past. Indeed, under the standard of direct evidence applied by the court of appeals in this case, the threshold question for determining a plaintiff's burden of proof is not whether the record contains evidence of substantial negative reliance on age-related comments at the moment of the adverse action. Rather, the question would be whether the employer's past actions or statements suggest an atmosphere of discriminatory animus. This standard does not require evidence of "discrimination brought to ground and visited upon" the claimant. Price Waterhouse, ____ U.S. at ____, 109 S. Ct. at 1791. Rather, it reduces direct evidence of discrimination to something akin to "negligence in the air." Cf., Palsgraf v. Long Island R.R. Co., 245 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99 (1928).

A review of the decisions of other courts of appeals confirms that the standard of direct evidence of discrimination applied in the decision below is inconsistent with the prevailing standard as exemplified in the decisions of the Eleventh Circuit. For example, the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, in Hebert v. Mohawk Rubber Co., found "no smoking gun evidence of age discrimination" in a record containing an age-related statement by the Chair of the defendant's Board to the affect that "its time we older guys turned over the daily reins to some other group." 872 F.2d 1104, 1115 (1st Cir. 1989). In a very recent decision, the First Circuit characterized a supervisor's references to a plaintiff as "the old man" and statements such as "the sales force is getting too old" not as direct evidence of discrimination but, at best, evidence of pretext to be considered after the plaintiff established a prima facie case under the McDonnell Douglas test. Medina-Munoz v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 896 F.2d 5, 9-10 (1st Cir. 1990). In a similar vein, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in Gagne v. Northwestern National Insurance Co., ruled that a remark by a supervisor that he "needed younger blood" did not constitute direct evidence of discrimination in the termination of an age-protected employee. 881 F.2d 309, 314-15 (6th Cir. 1989). Relying heavily on this Court's decision in Price Waterhouse, the court concluded that a supervisor's isolated or ambiguous age-related comments do not constitute direct evidence for purposes of the ADEA. Id. at 316.

Under the standard at work in these decisions, the evidence characterized by the court of appeals in the instant case as "direct evidence" is, at best, merely circumstantial evidence of discrimination. There being no direct evidence of discrimination in the record, the court of appeals erred in excusing Martin from proof of a prima facie case through the application of the McDonnell Douglas test.

III.

THE COURT OF APPEALS IN IGNORING THE DISTRICT COURT'S RULINGS ON PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENTIARY FAILINGS OR, IN THE ALTERNATIVE, IN REVERSING THE DISTRICT COURT ON THE BASIS OF COUNSEL'S BARE CITATION TO DEPOSITION TRANSCRIPTS WHICH WERE NOT PART OF THE RECORD BEFORE THE DISTRICT COURT, SO FAR DEPARTS FROM THE ACCEPTED AND USUAL COURSE OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS AS TO CALL FOR AN EXERCISE OF THIS COURT'S POWER OF SUPERVISION.

In a footnote inserted to provide an alternative ground for reversing summary judgment, the court of appeals states, "In any event, Martin would have met the requisite prongs of the McDonnell-Douglas test since he produced evidence that Michael Oravecs [sic], then a 34 year old, was reclassified as a grade XV, thereby showing that younger co-workers were treated more favorably." (App. A, infra, at 10a n.1). This conclusion is erroneous, for Oravec's "reclassification" does not satisfy the "different treatment" prong of the McDonnell Douglas test under the facts of this case.

The fact that "a 34 year old co-worker of Martin was promoted" is irrelevant (App. A., infra, at 5a). Martin's claim is not a promotion claim (see App. C., infra, at 37a). He does not claim that his skills and abilities qualified him for a better job. Rather, he argues that his position should have been upgraded regardless of who held it. As such, the relevant inquiry under McDonnell Douglas is not whether younger co-workers were treated more favorably than Martin. Rather, it is whether younger co-workers "in comparable positions" were treated more favorably in that their positions were upgraded (App. C., infra, at 37a). The court of appeals erroneously assumes, without citing any evidentiary support, that Oravec's promotion is evidence that his job was comparable to Martin's. This assumption ignores the magistrate's express finding that the plaintiff failed to introduce any competent evidence on this point.

The decision of the magistrate states:

> Mr. Martin's counsel has claimed that two non-members of the [age-protected] class, Mike Oravec and Janet Malcolm, were upgraded from Grade 14 to Grade 15. Counsel further claims that Ms. Malcolm supervised two employees while Mr. Martin supervised four. As support for these claims, counsel cites to portions of Mr. Oravec's and Ms. Malcolm's depositions. However, neither > the deposition transcripts in toto nor pertinent sections of those transcripts have been provided to the Court either on this motion or on the previous motion for summary judgment. These depositions are simply not part of the record before this Court. The plaintiff's bare citations to the depositions do not place before this Court evidence which would be admissible at trial and, therefore, cannot be considered. Since they cannot be considered, there is no evidence before the Court to find that the last prong of the prima facie case has been met.

App. C, infra, at 37a-38a. The decision of the court of appeals does not disturb this ruling.

In the event the court of appeals did not simply overlook the district court's ruling and, in fact, relied on the Oravec materials, its reliance conflicts with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, with its own decisions, including its decision in this case, and with the decisions of other courts of appeals. Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 10(a) provides that "[t]he original papers and exhibits filed in the district court, the transcript of proceedings, if any, and a certified copy of the docket entries prepared by the clerk of the district court shall constitute the record on appeal in all cases." The Oravec materials were not filed with the district court and, thus, were not part of the record on appeal and should not have been relied on as a basis for reversing the district court. The reason why the court of appeals might depart from this rule remains unexplained, for in previous rulings on Rule 10(a) the court has rightly ruled "[i]t is elementary that this court cannot consider any materials not furnished to the district court for, if those materials were not part of the record below, they are not properly a part of the record on appeal." United States v. Donsky, 825 F.2d 746, 749 (3d Cir. 1987). Indeed, in the instant case the court ruled that plaintiff's reference to another deposition transcript not filed in the district court was not part of the record on appeal (App. A, infra, at 12a n.2). See also, Henn v. National Geographic Society, 819 F.2d 824, 831 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 965 (1987).

The court of appeals' inattention to the district court's rulings on the different treatment prong of the McDonnell Douglas prima facie case test and, in the alternative, its unexplained reliance on the Oravec materials as the basis for satisfying that prong are clearly erroneous. Consequently, Martin's diparate treatment claim cannot be saved on the basis of indirect evidence.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, petitioners respectfully request that a writ of certiorari issue to review the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

COUNSEL FOR APPELLEE

OPINION OF THE COURT

MANSMANN, Circuit Judge.

In this appeal from a grant of summary judgment for the employer on an age discrimination claim based on a refusal to upgrade a position of employment, and dismissal of a claim of continuing age discrimination, the plaintiff has presented direct evidence from which a reasonable jury could conclude that age was a factor in the employment decision. Because we conclude that the magistrate erred by requiring the plaintiff to meet all prongs of the McDonnel-Douglas v. Green test, even in the face of direct evidence, we will vacate the magistrate's grant of summary judgment. In addition, we conclude that the magistrate erred by dismissing the continuing discrimination claim while discovery was still pending. We will remand to the district court for appropriate proceedings.

I.

On summary judgment, we review the facts in a light most favorable to the non-moving party. Princeton Univ. Phone Book, Inc. v. Bate, 582 F.2d 706 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 966 (1978). Andrew Martin, now age 64, was hired by the Mennen Company in 1964 as a Chief Accountant, a position classified as Grade XIV. Although his job title was changed to Accounting Manager in 1967, Martin's job responsibilities remained the same until 1970, during which time he regularly received favorable job reviews. On or about that year, Mennen reorganized the finance department. Because Mennen created new specialized positions and hired new employees, Martin was relieved of some of his duties. Martin's job grade classification, however, remained at Grade XIV.

In August of 1973, Martin's duties were further reduced, which he claims resulted in a substantial loss in responsibility equivalent to a demotion. Martin's job grade classification, however, remained unchanged. At that time Martin also began to report to the Director of Corporate Finance, William Scalia. Five months after the reduction in responsibilities, Martin's application for an upgrade to the position of International Controller was denied. The reason allegedly given for the denial was that Martin was not creative and that his "chemistry" did not fit with the new finance group. Martin did not believe, at the time, that age was a factor in either the reduction in responsibility, or denial of the upgrade.

In 1979, Martin again requested an upgrade of his job classification. The request, directed to Scalia, was for an upgrade of his current position, unlike his previous request which was an application for a new position. Scalia allegedly advised Martin not to push the request because, according to Scalia, Martin was to have been fired in 1974. Scalia also claimed that he had fought against Martin's firing, and had written job reviews which were more favorable than were warranted, in his opinion. Additionally, Scalia stated that he expected Martin to work as hard for him as he had for Martin, but Martin need not work like a "kid looking for a promotion." In the following year Scalia prepared a performance appraisal for Martin which stated "despite Andy's age, he continues to work hard and puts in long hours when necessary . . . ". Martin also claims that Scalia told him younger employees at Mennen were treated more favorably than older employees.

In 1985, Martin again requested an upgrade of his job classification. At Scalia's request, Martin prepared a job description of his position which Scalia submitted to the personnel department for evaluation. Michael F. Fadden, Director of Compensation and Benefits, evaluated Martin's position by reviewing the job description and interviewing both Martin and Scalia. Fadden then compared his evaluation of Martin's position with a salary consulting service known as the Salary Informational Retrieval System (SIRS), which is published by Organizational Resource Counselors, Inc. SIRS groups jobs with comparable duties and their corresponding salaries to enable subscribers to ensure the competitiveness of their salary structure. Based on his evaluation and the comparison, Fadden concluded that Martin's position could not properly be graded above a Grade XIV. Fadden reviewed his findings with Jerry J. Miller, then Vice President of Employee and Community Relations. Miller agreed with Fadden and wrote a letter to Scalia informing him of the decision not to upgrade Martin's position. Another request to evaluate Martin's position for an upgrade, filed by Scalia to Fadden, was denied late in 1985 based on the fact that Martin's responsibilities had not changed since the earlier evaluation. In January of 1986, Scalia advised Martin that he had been turned down for the upgrade.

Early in 1986, a 34 year old co-worker of Martin was promoted from Grade XIV to Grade XV and Martin claims that around that time Fadden tried to induce him to retire. Martin then investigated Mennen's payroll records and concluded that younger employees in the Finance Division had been either hired at grade levels above his own or had been offered job level upgrades as part of a systematic effort to retain younger employees "at the expense of older employees." In mid-1986 Martin filed a complaint with the EEOC alleging age discrimination for the failure to upgrade his job position in early 1986. Martin also filed a complaint with the New Jersey Division of Civil Rights and with the Superior Court of New Jersey alleging a violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA). The EEOC determined that it would not proceed with Martin's charge, and Mennen removed the suit to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey. By consent of the parties, the case was referred to a U.S. Magistrate.

In August of 1988, the Magistrate denied Mennen's motion for summary judgment on the 1986 discrimination claim, holding that the motion was premature because several depositions had yet to be taken. The magistrate rejected Mennen's motion despite the lack of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f) affidavit because this circuit has considered Rule 56(f) claims without an affidavit in several circumstances. However, the court granted Mennen's motion for summary judgment on the claims before 1986, rejecting application of the continuing violation theory, since Martin only alleged the 1986 discrimination in his EEOC complaint and had failed to show any factual support for the proposition that Mennen discriminated against older workers as a class. Based on its pretrial grant of summary judgment on the earlier claims, the court denied Martin's cross-motion to compel discovery of documents prior to 1982. The magistrate also denied the individual defendants' motion for summary judgment, finding a substantial identity between them and Mennen.

In June of 1989, Mennen again moved for summary judgment on the 1986 claim, which was granted by the magistrate. The magistrate held that Martin had failed to establish all the elements of a prima facie case of age discrimination, in that he had failed to show that non-members of the protected class (i.e., younger workers) in comparable positions were treated more favorably than he. Martin appeals.

Our review of a magistrate's order granting summary judgment is plenary. Summary judgment should only be granted when the non-moving party has failed to adduce sufficient evidence to create a genuine issue of material fact. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. See Siegel v. Alpha Wire Corporation, No. 89-5674 (3d. Cir. January 12, 1990). We review the magistrate's decision to rule on the initial motion for summary judgment, absent a Rule 56(f) affidavit, and limit discovery to the period after 1982 for an abuse of discretion.

II.

In Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893 (3d Cir. 1987), we held that a plaintiff could establish a case of age discrimination under the ADEA, 29 U.S.C. § 621 et. seq. (1982), through either direct or indirect evidence. We further noted that in most cases direct evidence of the employer's intent to discriminate would be unavailable. For a plaintiff claiming wrongful discharge, we stated that:

> In the absence of direct evidence a plaintiff may establish a prima facie case of discrimination by proving by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) he belongs to a protected class; (2) he was qualified for the position; (3) he was dismissed despite being qualified; and (4) ultimately was replaced by a person sufficiently younger to permit an inference of age discrimination. (Emphasis added.)

Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d at 897.

This four part test was developed from the Supreme Court opinion in McDonell-Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973), and forms the first prong of a complex allocation of burdens of proof outlined in Texas Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248 (1981). The allocation is as follows:

> First, the plaintiff has the burden of proving by the preponderance of the evidence a prima facie case of discrimination. Second, if the plaintiff succeeds in proving the prima facie case, the burden shifts to the defendant "to articulate some legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the employer's rejection." [Citation omitted.] Third, should the defendant carry this burden, the plaintiff must then have an opportunity to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the legitimate reasons offered by the defendant were > not its true reasons, but were a pretext for discrimination.

Texas Dept. of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. at 252-53. The prima facie case requirements, and the shifting burdens of production, allow the plaintiff to rely on "assumptions about the behavior of employers." Chipollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d at 897. In addition to establishing the prima facie case by indirect evidence, "a plaintiff can prevail by means of indirect proof that the employer's reasons [for the discharge or failure to promote] are pretextual." Chipollini, 814 F.2d at 898. Similarly, the plaintiff can overcome the employer's proffered reason for discharge or failure to promote by producing direct evidence that a discriminatory motive influenced the employer. Chipollini, 814 F.2d at 898.

Here, Mennen stipulated that Martin is a member of a protected class and that he was denied an upgrade. Martin's evidence of his qualifications for an upgrade consisted of the fact that some of the duties he originally performed had been parceled out to others in the 1971 reorganization, and the high job performance reviews he had received from his superiors. Although the magistrate initially found that Martin had failed to demonstrate that he was qualified for an upgrade, she later held that since Scalia and other Mennen managers had recommended the upgrade, Martin was qualified.

The elaborate three prong test devised to assist plaintiffs with a lack of direct evidence is unnecessary in the case here, where there exists direct evidence to suggest an intent to discriminate. Several statements made by Martin's own supervisor suggest that age could have been a factor in the decision not to upgrade

Martin's job. Statements such as: "despite [his] age, he continues to work hard and puts in long hours when necessary," and "I don't expect you to work like a kid looking for a promotion", indicate that age could be a substantial factor in the decision made by Mennen. In addition, Martin claims that his immediate supervisor, William Scalia, had told him several times during performance reviews that the company treated younger employees more favorably in order to get them to remain in the company. Thus, in the context of age discrimination, the question is one of "whether the evidence could support an inference that the employer did not act for nondiscriminatory reasons, not whether the evidence necessarily leads to that conclusion that the employer did act for discriminatory reasons." Chippolini, 814 F.2d at 900.

As Justice O'Connor's concurring opinion in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 109 S. Ct. 1775 (1989) stated:

> Where an individual disparate treatment plaintiff has shown by a preponderence of the evidence that an illegitimate criterion was a substantial factor in an adverse employment decision, the deterrent purpose of the statute has clearly been triggered. More importantly, as an evidentiary matter, a reasonable factfinder could comclude that absent further explanation, the employer's discriminatory motivation "caused" the employment decision.

Price Waterhouse, 109 S. Ct at 1798. We conclude that the magistrate erred by requiring Martin to establish his prima facie case on the basis of the McDonnell-Douglas factors when there was direct evidence from which a reasonable jury could find discriminatory intent.[1]

Because the magistrate found that the prima facie case had not been established, the magistrate determined it was unnecessary to consider whether Mennen had advanced a legitimate non-discriminatory rationale for its decision or whether Martin could show that the rationale was a pretext. Since we conclude that sufficient facts were alleged from which a prima facie case was established, Martin must be allowed to produce evidence that Mennen's denial of an upgrade based on the SIRS evaluation is "unworthy of credence and therefore pretextual." Martin's evidence consists of statements by Fadden acknowledging the possibility that the SIRS system could be manipulated. Additionally, Martin's expert, Dr. Russell, stated that the use of SIRS was an improper evaluation method.

In Graham v. Leopold, 779 F.2d 170 (3d Cir. 1985), we stated that the court should not make its own inferences from the evidence, but rather should determine whether "a jury could reasonably have inferred" that there was illegal discrimination. Graham, 779 F.2d at 173. Moreover, in Siegel v. Alpha Wire Corp., No. 89-5674 (3d Cir. January 12, 1990), we once again explained that it was error for the district court to draw inferences from the evidence and resolve issues of fact more properly left to the jury to decide. Siegel, slip op. at 11. Clearly, the jury should be entitled to draw inferences about whether Mennen's reasons for refusing to upgrade Martin were pretextua'

1. In any event, Martin would have met the requisite prongs of the McDonnell-Douglas test since he produced evidence that Michael Oravecs, then a 34 year old, was reclassified as a grade XV, thereby showing that younger co-workers were treated more favorably.

III.

Martin also argues that the magistrate erred by dismissing his continuing discrimination claim while discovery was still outstanding and by limiting discovery to the post 1982 period on the failure to upgrade claim of discrimination. Mennen contends that Martin's failure to file a Rule 56(f) affidavit precluded the magistrate from ruling on Martin's request for additional discovery. While it is generally understood that in order to oppose a motion for summary judgment on the basis that further discovery is necessary the non-moving party must file an affidavit stating the nature of the discovery sought and its relevance to the motion, the magistrate correctly noted that we have considered Rule 56(f) claims without the filing of affidavits. See e.g., Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772 (3d Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1215 (1984) (arguments contained in response brief can be read as Rule 56(f) affidavit). By considering Martin's moving papers and his comments at oral argument in opposition to the summary judgment motion as a Rule 56(f) affidavit, the magistrate examined the individual claims to see if further discovery was warranted. Under these circumstances, the magistrate did not abuse her discretion by reviewing the claims in the absence of a Rule 56(f) affidavit. The magistrate did err, however, by concluding that Martin had failed to allege sufficient facts to plead the continuing discrimination claim where Martin claimed that Mennen's entire compensation and grade level system operated to discriminate against older employees. Specifically, Martin alleged in Count I that: "The Defendants have wrongfully failed to upgrade the Plaintiff's job classification and have instituted a salary system which gives preference to employees based on age . . . . " (Emphasis added.) Consequently, we will vacate the magistrate's dismissal of the claim with prejudice and remand for the magistrate to permit further discovery by the plaintiff on that claim.[2]

IV.

For the above stated reasons, we will vacate the grant of summary judgment for Mennen in Martin's claim of age discrimination for failing to upgrade his position and vacate the magistrate's dismissal of the claim of continuing discrimination. Furthermore, we are confident that the magistrate will permit Martin to conclude discovery, without limitation as to the years (except as to relevance), in order to support the continuing discrimination claim as set forth in Count I of the amended complaint.

TO THE CLERK:

Please file the foregoing opinion.

2. Mennen correctly noted that the Colgan deposition had not been entered in the record, and therefore, we have not considered it in our disposition of this case. We caution counsel that the general rule in this court is to require that any evidence, such as depositions or interrogatories, upon which the parties rely must be filed to be considered part of the record. Mere reference to the documents is insufficient. In addition, it is generally understood in this court and the district courts comprising this circuit, that when opposing a motion for summary judgment on the basis that additional discovery is necessary, the party will file a Rule 56(f) affidavit. This will eliminate the need for prescience on the part of the court hearing the motion, as occurred here.

APPENDIX B — FIRST OPINION OF DISTRICT COURT

Filed August 17, 1988

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

Civil Action No. 87-2546 (REC)

ANDREW S. MARTIN, ET AL.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

THE MENNEN COMPANY, ET AL.,

Defendants.

This litigation involves plaintiff's (Andrew Martin) claim that he was discriminated on account of his age by his employer, The Mennen Company. In the instant motion, defendants have moved for summary judgment and plaintiff has cross-moved to compel defendants to provide certain discovery. The parties have consented to have me decide this motion, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c).

Plaintiff is 64 years old. He was hired in 1964, at age 39, by Mennen as a chief accountant, Grade XIV, at an annual salary of $11,200.00. As a chief accountant, plaintiff's duties included: corporate accounting, division accounting, accounts payable, payroll, fringe benefit accounting, cost accounting, budgets, marketing controls, internal controls, international division accounting and tax compliance. In December of 1967, plaintiff's job title was changed to accounting manager but his responsibilities remained the same. During the time period of 1964 through 1970, plaintiff received favorable job reviews.

In or about 1970, Mennen reorganized the finance department. During this reorganization, new specialized positions were created and new employees hired to staff these jobs. This reorganization affected plaintiff because some of his previous duties were transferred to individuals recently hired. Plaintiff claims that the new hires were all substantially younger and were either given higher grade classifications or were upgraded shortly after hiring.

By the end of 1971, plaintiff's reduced responsibilities included: corporate accounting, domestic accounting, payroll, accounts payable, fringe benefit accounting, and supervision of the cashier function. In April 1972, plaintiff was assigned some of the insurance duties previously assigned to the tax manager. Thereafter, plaintiff became involved with the forecasting of cash requirements and the investment of excess cash in money market instruments.

In August of 1973, plaintiff began to report to the Director of Corporate Finance, William Scalia. At this time, all the accounting and accounts payable duties were removed from plaintiff's position and assigned to another position. Plaintiff claims that these changes resulted in a substantial loss in his level of responsibility and amounted to a demotion.

In or about January of 1974, plaintiff applied for the position of International Controller. This application for an upgrade was denied. Plaintiff questioned this decision and was allegedly informed by L.D. Horne, Mennen's Chief Executive Officer, that he was not upgraded because his chemistry did not fit with the new finance group that was being assembled and because plaintiff was not creative. Plaintiff, at the time, did not believe that age was a factor in his demotion nor that it was at the root of Mr. Horne's comments.

In 1979, plaintiff claims that he asked Mr. Scalia to upgrade his position. At that time, plaintiff alleges that Mr. Scalia advised him not to push his luck because he (Mr. Scalia) had previously protected him from being fired. Thereafter, plaintiff was given a handwritten letter composed by Mr. Scalia. In this letter, amongst other things, Mr. Scalia stated "You were to be fired in 1974, I prevented that; I fought for you which you don't appreciate . . . my written reviews were always more positive than my opinion. . " (Plaintiff's exhibit G at 1). Additionally, Mr. Scalia stated, "I don't expect you to work like a kid looking for a promotion, but I do expect you to help me and protect me to work as hard for me as I have worked for you" (Plaintiff's exhibit G at 2).

In 1980, plaintiff's performance appraisal was prepared by Mr. Scalia. In this appraisal, Mr. Scalia stated " . . . despite Andy's age, he continues to work hard and puts in long hours when necessary . . . " (Plaintiff's exhibit F at 2). Additionally, plaintiff claims that he was told by Mr. Scalia that younger employees at Mennen were treated more favorably than older employees. Id.

In or about late 1984 or early 1985, plaintiff asked Mr. Scalia to request an evaluation of his position. At Mr. Scalia's request, plaintiff prepared a job description of his duties and responsibilities. Plaintiff submitted the job description to Mr.

Scalia who in turn submitted it to the personnel department for an evaluation.

In 1985, Michael F. Fadden, Director of Compensation and Benefits, evaluated plaintiff's position. Mr. Fadden reviewed the position description prepared by plaintiff and interviewed plaintiff and Mr. Scalia. Mr. Fadden then compared his evaluation of plaintiff's position with a salary consulting service known as the Salary Information Retrieval System (SIRS) published by Organization Resources Counselors, Inc. SIRS groups together jobs with comparable duties and their corresponding salaries to enable subscribers to ensure that their salary structure is competitive. After completing this anaysis, Mr. Fadden concluded that plaintiff's position could not properly be graded above a Grade 14.

Mr. Fadden reviewed his findings with Jerry J. Miller, Mennen's then Vice President of Employee and Community Relations. Mr. Miller agreed with Mr. Fadden's conclusions and wrote a memorandum to Mr. Scalia informing him of the decision.

By memorandum dated September 20, 1983, Mr. Scalia again requested that the personnel department evaluate plaintiff's position to determine if it could be upgraded. Mr. Fadden reviewed this request but denied an upgrade on November 7, 1985 because he concluded that plaintiff's responsibilities had not changed since his position was evaluated earlier in 1983. Mr. Scalia advised plaintiff that he was turned down for an upgrade in early January of 1986.

In February of 1986, a 34 year old Grade 14 co-worker of plaintiff was promoted to a Grade 15. Around this time, plaintiff claims that Mr. Fadden tried to induce him to retire. Following these two events, plaintiff investigated the payroll records of the Mennen Company to ascertain how his status related to that of Mennen's younger employees. According to plaintiff, his investigation revealed that "younger employees in the Finance Division at Mennen had been hired at grade levels above his own and had been offered job level upgrades as part of a systematic effort to retain and promote younger employees at the expense of older employees" (Plaintiff's Brief at 8).

On June 30, 1986, plaintiff filed a charge of discrimination with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), claiming that he was wrongfully denied an upgrade in his job position with Mennen on or about January 5, 1986 because of his age. A companion verified complaint was filed with the New Jersey Division on Civil Rights on August 27, 1986. On May 4, 1987, plaintiff filed a complaint in Superior Court of New Jersey, Law Division, Somerset County. On June 26, 1987, Mennen removed this suit to the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey. On December 17, 1987, the EEOC made a determination that it would not proceed with the investigation of plaintiff's charge.

Defendants move here (i) for summary judgment on plaintiff's ADEA claims because plaintiff has allegedly failed to set forth a prima facie basis for these claims; (ii) to dismiss all of plaintiff's claims relating to events predating the failure to upgrade him in 1986 based upon the statute of limitations; (iii) for summary judgment on plaintiff's claims brought under the Fair Labor Standards Act, breach of contract and for intentional infliction of emotional distress (unopposed by plaintiff); and (iv) to dismiss the individual defendants for failure to have named them in the EEOC charge.

Appendix B

Prematurity of Motion

At oral argument, plaintiff claimed that this motion was premature because several depositions of Mennen employees had yet to be taken. Plaintiff did not brief this argument nor was an affidavit filed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(f). Defendants responded at oral argument that plaintiff's failure to file a Rule 56(f) affidavit should preclude this court from ruling on this issue. Rule 56(f) provides:

> "Should it appear from the affidavits of a party opposing the motion that the party cannot for reasons stated present by affidavit facts essential to justify the party's opposition, the court may refuse the application for judgment or may order a continuance to permit affidavits to be obtained or depositions to be taken or discovery to be had or may make such other order as is just."

When a party opposes a summary judgment motion because he seeks discovery the correct procedure is for an affidavit to be filed "setting forth the reason why such discovery is needed and in particular what facts materal to his position are unavailable to him without the discovery". Hancock Industries v. Schaeffer, 619 F.Supp. 322, 327 (E.D.Pa. 1985). The affidavit must present reasons which are genuine and convincing, not speculative or even merely colorable. Mid-South Grizzlies v. National Football League, 720 F.2d 772, 779-80 (3d Cir. 1983), cert. den., 467 U.S. 1215, 104 S.Ct. 2657, 81 L.Ed.2d 364 (1984). Moreover, the discovery sought must be relevant to the plaintiff's ability to counter the specific issue upon which summary judgment is sought. Froid v. Berres, 649 F.Supp. 1418, 1425 (D.N.J. 1986). Whether a motion should be continued pursuant to Rule 56(f) is within the sound discretion of the court. Hancock Industries, supra at 327.

Here, plaintiff failed to file a Rule 56(f) affidvit. Most courts which have considered the issue have held that filing an affidavit is necessary to properly raise a Rule 56(f) contention. See e.g., Gray v. Udevitz, 656 F.2d 588 (10th Cir. 1981); Thi-Hawaii v. First American Financial Corp., 627 F.2d 991 (9th Cir. 1980); Over the Road Drivers v. Transport Insurance Co., 637 F.2d 816 (1st Cir. 1980). However, this circuit has considered Rule 56(f) claims even without an affidavit in several circumstances. See Hancock Industries, supra at 327 (motion papers, even without an affidavit, and arguments made at hearing were sufficient); Mid-South Grizzlies, supra at 780 (arguments for Rule 56(f) relief contained in plaintiff's response to defendants' reply brief sufficient).

The question of prematurity was discussed in a conference call with the parties after the filing of this motion. And, thus the issue was known to the parties. Although it escapes me why plaintiff did not address the issue in the proper mode — by a Rule 56(f) affidavit — nevertheless, I will exercise my discretion to consider plaintiff's moving papers concerning his failure to obtain certain discovery and his comments at oral argument in the absence of a Rule 56(f) affidavit. However, I do not believe this motion, as a whole, should be continued pending discovery. Rather, I will examine defendants' arguments individually and ascertain whether plaintiff needs additional discovery on these issues and whether such discovery is warranted to effectively refute these arguments.

Prima facie Age Discrimination Claim

that Mennen has continuously discriminated against him because of his age between 1971 and 1987. He claims that Mennen wrongfully failed to upgrade his job classification and has instituted a salary system which gives preference to employees based upon age. Specifically, plaintiff claims that over the years various portions of his responsibilities were parceled out to younger newly hired employees which effectively prevented him from being upgarded. Additionally, plaintiff asserts that certain comments made by his superiors concerning his age demonstrate Mennen's discriminatory intent.

Mennen argues that summary judgment is appropriate because plaintiff has failed to establish specific facts which show that he was denied an upgrade because of his age. However, even assuming, arguendo, that plaintiff has demonstrated a prima facie case of age discrimination, Mennen claims that he has not shown that the continuing violation theory is applicable. Thus, at most, plaintiff can only proceed as to his discrimination claim involving the alleged failure to promote in 1986.

The purpose of the summary judgment rule is the avoidance of the delay and expense of an unnecessary trial where the circumstances of the case, the applicable law and the facts, are ripe for such procedure. Goodman v. Mead Johnson & Co., 534 F.2d 566, 573 (3d Cir. 1976), cert. denied 429 U.S. 1038, 97 S.Ct. 732, 50 L.Ed.2d 748 (1977). According to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56, summary judgment may only be granted if there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Chippolini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 593, 896 (3d Cir. 1987); American Lung Association of New Jersey v. Kean, 670 F.Supp. 1285, 1287 (D.N.J. 1987). Material facts are identified by reference to the substantive law and an issue is genuine only "if the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could find for the nonmoving party." Equipment Comm. Fin. Co. v. C.I.T. Find. Serv. Corp., 812 F.2d 141, 144 (3d Cir. 1987). The moving party bears the initial burden of identifying evidence which shows the absence of a genuine issue of material fact. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 2552-53, 91 L.Ed.2d 265, 274 (1986). "Once that burden has been met, the nonmoving party must set forth "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial" or the factual record will be taken as settled and judgment will be entered as a matter of law." American Lung Association of New Jersey, supra at 1287, quoting Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 1356, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986). (The nonmoving party may not rest upon the mere allegatons or denials of his pleadings in opposing summary judgment). However, if a claimant's theory is inherently implausible a greater evidentiary showing is required to meet this burden. Kellam Energy Inc. v. Duncan, 668 F.Sup. 861, 872 (D.Del. 1987). Importantly, the record must be viewed in the light most favorable to the party opposing the motion and all "inferences, doubts and issues of credibility" will be resolved against the moving party, E.E.O.C. v. City of Mt. Lebanon, 842 F.2d 1480, 1485 (3d Cir. 1988). In the context of an age discrimination claim, the court must consider whether the evidence "could support an inference that the employer did not act for non-discriminatory reasons, not whether the evidence necessarily leads to that conclusion that the employer did act for discriminatory reasons." Chippolini supra at 900.

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) provides that:

> "It shall be unlawful for an employer (1) . . . to discharge or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation terms, > conditions, or privileges of employment because of such individual's age . . . "

29 U.S.C. § 623(a).

In an age discrimination case, the ultimate burden of proof rests with the plaintiff to demonstrate that age was a determinative factor in the employer's decision. Chippollini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893 (3d Cir. 1987). However, while the plaintiff is not required to show that age was the employer's sole consideration he must prove that "age made a difference" in the decision. Duffy v. Wheeling Pittsburgh Steel Corp., 738 F.2d 1393, 1395 (3d Cir. 1984). This showing may be made by either direct or indirect evidence. Chipollini, supra at 897.

Quite recently, the Third Circuit has reiterated that where a wrongful failure to promote is alleged, the McDonnell Douglas three stage procedure requires a plaintiff first to prove a prima facie case, i.e. to show that he is a member of a protected class, that he was qualified for the position but nevertheless was rejected and that non-members of the protected class were treated more favorably than he was. Roebuck v. Drexel University, No. 87-1301 slip op. at 23 (3d Cir. July 26, 1988)[1] citing, McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792, 802, 93 S.Ct. 1817, 36 L.Ed.2d 668 (1973). Once this burden is met, the employer must "articulate a legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for the complained-of action." Roebuck, supra at 24. The burden then shifts to the plaintiff to demonstrate that the reasons offered by the employer were a pretext for discrimination. Id. Importantly, a plaintiff must show that the employer's rationale is a fabricated justification for discrimination "either directly by persuading the court that a discriminatory reason more likely motivated the employer or indirectly by showing that the employer's proffered explanation is unworthy of credence". Chippollini, supra at 898, quoting Texas Department of Community Affairs v Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 256, 101 S.Ct. 1083, 67 L.Ed.2d 207 (1981) (emphasis added). Thus, after establishing his prima facie case, plaintiff can prevail by "indirect proof that the employer's reasons are pretextual without presenting evidence specifically relating to age." Chippollini, supra at 898.

1. Roebuck was a race discrimination case. However, this circuit has long recognized "that the standards of proof under the [ADEA] are identical to those under Title VII and § 1981". Roebuck, supra at 25 n.20.

First, this court must consider whether plaintiff has established a prima facie case of age discrimination.[2] Defendants have stipulated that plaintiff is a member of a protected class and that he was denied an upgrade. The dispute here centers on whether plaintiff qualified for an upgrade and whether younger employees in similar circumstances were given upgrades.

Plaintiff claims he was qualified for an upgrade because tasks he originally performed were parceled out to newly hired individuals who ultimately were given upgrades. Essentially, plaintiff argues that his "recognized experience, intelligence and business sense", coupled with his ability to perform the tasks which have been given to other employees, qualifies him for an upgrade. According to plaintiff, the fact that younger employees assumed responsibilities which were previously assigned to him demonstrates Mennen's discriminatory intent. Plaintiff also notes that he was the oldest member of the finance department at the time and had never received an upgrade despite favorable performance reviews.

2. Unfortunately, plaintiff seems to have lost sight of his objective in this inquiry. Plaintiff must demonstrate Mennen's failure to upgrade his position in 1986 constitutes a prima facie case of age discrimination. Only if a prima facie case of discrimination is demonstrated in 1986 can plaintiff hope to proceed with his continuing violations claim. Here, however, plaintiff places little emphasis on the 1986 incident. Rather, plaintiff concentrates almost exclusively on incidents occurring prior to 1986.

Defendants argue that plaintiff has presented no evidence that his position qualifies for an upgrade other than his subjective beliefs. Defendants assert that plaintiff's position was unique and that he has failed to demonstrate that his position was equivalent to other higher graded positions. Additionally, defendants argue that plaintiff has presented no evidence that younger employees in similarly situated positions received upgrades.

I agree with defendants that plaintiff has failed to demonstrate that he is qualified for an upgrade to grade level 15. Plaintiff has presented no evidence comparing his duties with other employees holding grade level 15 positions. Plaintiff also has failed to show or even address how he has fulfilled the criteria established by Mennen for obtaining a grade level 15 upgrade. (See defendants' exhibit 13).[3] Plaintiff's reliance on the 1971 reorganization and its effect on his duties is simply not relevant to his claim of discriminatory treatment in 1986.

However, because plaintiff has yet to take the depositions of several Mennen employees or to take discovery regarding the

3. Because of this finding, it is unnecessary for this court to consider whether 1) younger employees were treated more favorably, 2) Mennen has advanced a legitimate non-discriminatory rationale for its decision or whether 3) plaintiff can show that Mr. Mennen's rationale was a pretext.

documents being produced, pp. 20-21, infra, it would be premature to dismiss plaintiff's claim at this juncture, without allowing this additional discovery.[4] Certainly, after such additional discovery, if plaintiff cannot make a prima facie case, defendants' motion should be renewed. Thus, defendants' motion for summary judgment to dismiss plaintiff's 1986 age discrimination claim will be denied without prejudice.

Continuing Violations

Plaintiffs in New Jersey must file a claim alleging a violation of the ADEA with the EEOC "within 300 days after the alleged unlawful practice occurred" 29 U.S.C. § 626(d). This limitation period is necessary to "guarant[y] the protection of the civil rights laws to those who promptly assert their rights [and to] protect employers from the burden of defending claims from employment decisions that are long past". College v. Ricks, 449 U.S. 250, 256-57, 101 S.Ct. 498, 66 L.Ed.2d 431 (1980).

Here, plaintiff's charge filed with the EEOC on June 30, 1986 alleges only that Mennen's denial of his request to have his position reclassified on or about January 5, 1986 constitutes age discrimination. However, in plaintiff's complaint he claims that the defendant has continuously discriminated against him because of his age since 1971. These prior acts of alleged discrimination occurred outside of the ADEA's filing period. As such, plaintiff is barred from litigating these claims unless he can demonstrate that they are part of a "continuing violation". Because plaintiff has not done so nor could he with additional discovery, defendants are entitled to summary judgment on plaintiff's age discrimination claims prior to the 1986 EEOC charge.

4. See, infra, p. 6-7.

Appendix B

Under the continuing violation theory a plaintiff may "complain about a series of employer actions conducted pursuant to a policy or practice of discrimination as long as [he] files a timely complaint as to one of these actions." Porta v. Rollins Environmental Services, (N.J.) Inc., 654 F.Supp. 1275, 1281 (D.N.J. 1987) aff'd 845 F.2d 1014 (3d Cir. 1988). Before determining whether the continuing violation theory applies, this court must first identify the "unlawful employment practice" of which the paintiff complains. Fuchilla v. Prockop, 682 F.Supp. 247, 257 (D.N.J. 1987) quoting Delaware State College, supra at 257. The plaintiff may not simply point to "isolated or sporadic acts of intentional discrimination", Porta, supra at 1281 or seek to "resurrect and litigate grievances long past by merely appending them to a current complaint". Erdmann v. Bd. of Ed. Union County Regional High School District 1, 541 F.Supp. 388, 393 (D.N.J. 1982). Rather, the plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the employer's discriminmatory practice was directed at the class of which plaintiff was a member and was part of the company's "standard operating procedure". Jewett v. International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, 653 F.2d 89, 91 (3d Cir. 1981) cert. den. 454 U.S. 969, 102 S.Ct. 515, 70 L.Ed.2d 386 (1981), quoting Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 336, 97 S.Ct. 1843, 52 L.Ed.2d 396 (1977). To withstand a motion for summary judgment "a plaintiff must at minimum identify the policy or practice upon which the claim of continuing violation is based and demonstrate at least some factual support for that claim" Erdman, supra at 393.

Judge Whipple has explained that

> "The continuing violation theory can best be understood by reference to the practical consideration which justifies this expansion of the > Title VII filing periods. Where the instances of employment discrimination charged all involve a particular company policy or practice, the past and otherwise stale claims may be litigated without need of delving into the specifics of each employment decision. The defendant employer is not burdened with the necessity of justifying each particular instance of alleged discrimination; but rather, may successfully defend against all the claims by justifying the practice challenged as a whole. The congressional intent that employers not be unreasonably burdened with preserving for years complete records of each and every employment decision is not frustrated when the continuing violation theory is held to its proper scope. Similarly, plaintiff employees can meet their burden of establishing the existence of a continuing violation without reference to the specific circumstances of particular incidents by showing with documents or testimony that the employer maintains a discriminatory policy or procedure, or perhaps by demonstrating statistically that a discriminatory practice is followed, see e.g., Davis v. Califano, 613 F.2d 957 (D.C.Cir. 1979).

Appendix B

Id. at 393.

Here, plaintiff has failed to show any factual support or even claim that Mennen has discriminated against older workers as a class as part of its standard operating procedure. Rather, plaintiff has focused on isolated incidents over the course of fifteen years which he asserts demonstrates Mennen's discriminatory intent. Essentially, plaintiff alleges that because Mennen discriminated against him in a manner which was "intentional, pervasive and continuing from the 1971 reorganization to the last date of his employement" (Plaintiff's Brief at 19) he should be permitted to invoke the continuing violation theory. Even assuming, however, that plaintiff's assertions are true it is clear that the continuing violation theory is inapplicable. This theory is designed to attack a company practice of discriminating against a class of employees over the course of many years without delving into the specifics of each discriminatory act. The key is that a plaintiff must point to a discriminatory company policy against a class of employees not merely isolated acts of discrimination directed at one individual. While it is of course possible that a company policy could be directed at a class of one, i.e., only one woman in a department, see porta, supra at 1282, such is not the case here.

Therefore, because plaintiff has failed to show any factual support for the proposition that Mennen discriminated against older workers as a class he may not invoke the continuing violations theory. While this result may seem harsh, it must be emphasized that plaintiff always had the opportunity to file a timely charge of discrimination after each incident occurred at Mennen. His failure to do so over the past fifteen years will preclude him from resurrecting and litigating these past grievances under the guise of the continuing violation theory. Plaintiff's claims of discrimination occurring before his 1986 EEOC charge are dismissed with prejudice.

Plaintiff's Failure to Name the Individual Defendants in the EEOC Charge

Generally, parties not named in an EEOC charge cannot later be sued in federal court for violation of the ADEA. "The purpose of this requirement is to ensure that each defendant has knowledge of the alleged violation and a chance to resolve this dispute amicably before litigaton". Bumpers v. International Mill Services, Inc., 595 F.Supp. 166, 170 (E.D. Pa. 1984).

However, exceptions to this general rule are permitted where certain prerequisites are satisfied. Both parties have relied on Glus v. G.C. Murphy Company, 562 F.2d 880 (3d Cir. 1977) in arguing that the four part test enunciated in that Title VII case is applicable to this ADEA litigation. While standards in Title VII and ADEA litigation are often interchangeable, see Roebuck, supra at 25 n.20, such is not the case here. Glus and the cases adopting its four part test have never been applied in this circuit in an ADEA context. Alternatively, several courts, including one in this circuit, have adopted a separate two part test to deal specifically with this issue in ADEA litigation. This test permits plaintiffs to bring age discrimination suits against defendants not named in prior administrative proceedings where "there is substantial identification between the defendants not named in the prior administrative charge and the defendants who were so named and ii) the defendant not named in the administrative charge was aware of the administrative proceedings" Id. at 170[5]. See also Gunning v. San Antonio Teachers Credit Union, 652 F.Supp. 697, 698 (W.D.Tex. 1987); Lettich v. Kenway, 590 F.Supp. 1225, 1227 (D.Mass 1984); Rio v. Presbyterian Hospital in the City of New York, 561 F.Supp. 325, 326 (S.D.N.Y. 1983); Allen v. Colgate-Palmolive Co., 539 F.Supp. 57, 69 (S.D.N.Y. 1981). The rationale for excusing strict compliance with the statute is twofold:

5. I find it disturbing that defendants quoted almost verbatim a passage of Judge Kelly's opinion in Bumpers without citing that case to this court and then proceeded to ignore its holding concerning ADEA plaintiffs. Compare defendants, brief at 37 with Bumpers supra at 170.

Appendix B

> "[First] requiring technical compliance with the statute would not further the policies that underlie the notice requirement of section 626(d). [Second] [a]n unnamed defendant who is aware of the administrative proceedings and whose interest are aligned with another defendant who was named in those proceedings is likely to have had an opportunity before litigation to contribute to the amicable resolution of the dispute."

Gunning, supra at 698. In light of the foregoing, I believe it is more appropriate to evaluate defendants' motion under the Bumpers ADEA test than the Glus Title VII test.

Here, I find that there is "substantial identity" between the individual defendants and Mennen. This is consistent with the general view that employees in a supervisory capacity may be identified for the purposes of ADEA litigation with their corporate employer. See Rio, supra at 326; Allen, supra at 69, see also, Lettich, supra at 1227 (partners in a law firm have substantial identity with the firm).

Next, I must consider whether the individual defendants had notice of the administrative proceedings. The burden is on corporate employees not named in an EEOC charge to demonstrate that they did not have notice. Rio, supra at 326; Allen, supra at 69. Plaintiff in his brief claims that the individual defendants were aware of the individual proceedings from the outset. Defendants do not dispute this statement either in their brief or in affidavits submitted by the parties themselves. Thus, the individual defendants have failed to sustain their burden that they were not notified about the EEOC proceedings. Accordingly, the individual defendants motion for summary judgment is denied.

Appendix B

Plaintiff's Cross-Motion to Compel Discovery

Plaintiff claims that defendants have failed to supply a complete answer to Interrogatory No. 11. Interrogatory No. 11 requires defendants to provide the following information:

11. With respect to all employees within any Morris County Mennen Company facilty having a grade leve of 14 and above, set forth the following in detail and with specificity:

(a) their name, address and current age;

(b) their age at hiring with the Mennen Company;

(c) the educational background of each person identified;

(d) supply the salary history from the time of hiring to date and include benefits and bonuses of each individual so identified;

(e) supply the performance appraised/summary for each individual identified since 1971.

Plaintiff asserts that defendants have failed to provide information concerning employees having a grade level above 15. Plaintiff also claims that defendants have failed to designate the grade level of the individual named and provided only information regarding employees having a grade level 14 or 15.

Because I have dismissed plaintiff's claims purportedly arising under the continuing violations theory, the only relevant issue is whether plaintiff, with additional discovery can demonstrate a prima facie case of age discrimination in 1986. Thus, information concerning employees at grade levels 14 and 15, their responsibilities, and age during this recent time frame is relevant. However, I find that defendants have already supplied or made available to plaintiff sufficient information to document a 1986 age discrimination claim (if one exists). See Defendants' Reply Brief Exhibit 6. Documents prior to 1982 or concerning employees above grade level 15 which plaintiff seeks are simply not necessary. Defendants must though designate the grade level of each individual previously named within twenty days of the date of this Opinion and Order.

Conclusion[6]

In conclusion, defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted in part and denied in part. Specifically, because the continuing violation theory is inapplicable, summary judgment is granted on all claims prior to the 1986 EEOC charge. However, defendants' motion for summary judgment on the 1986 claim is denied without prejudice. The individual defendants' motion for summary judgment is denied. Plaintiff's cross-motion to compel answers to Interrogatory 11 is granted in part and denied in part as explained above.

APPENDIX C — SECOND OPINION OF DISTRICT COURT

Filed June 14, 1989

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

Civil Action No. 87-2546(JCL)

ANDREW S. MARTIN,

Plaintiff,

v.

THE MENNAN COMPANY, ET AL.,

Defendants.

MEMORANDUM AND ORDER

This litigation involves plaintiff's contention that he was discriminated against by his employer on the basis of age, in violation of 29 U.S.C. § 623, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA). The parties have consented to have this Court decide the motion pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c).

The only claim for relief remaining in this action is the claim that the plaintiff was wrongfully denied an upgrade in his position in 1986. All other claims have previously been dismissed with prejudice by the Stipulation of Dismissal of March 22, 1988 and this Court's Order of August 17, 1988.

The defendants have moved for summary judgment to dismiss the remaining claim. This same motion had been brought previously. It was denied without prejudice to allow further discovery to be taken. All discovery is complete. The issue is now ripe for decision and, for the reasons stated herein, will be granted.

This Court has already set forth the factual background to the case. Opinion at pp. 1-6 (August 17, 1988). Those facts are incorporated herein by reference. Any additional facts necessary to address the current motion are discussed infra.

I.

Summary Judgment

Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c) summary judgment can be granted if there is no genuine issue on a material fact and the movant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See Chippolini v. Spencer Gifts, Inc., 814 F.2d 893 (3d Cir. 1987), cert. dismissed, ____ U.S. ____ , 108 S.Ct. 26, 97 L.Ed.2d 815 (1987).

A fact is material only if, with reference to the substantive law, it will affect the outcome of the action. See Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242 (1986). An issue is genuine if a reasonable jury could find in favor of the nonmovant. Id.

Regardless of which party bears the burden at trial, on a summary judgment motion the movant must initially show that there is no genuine issue of material fact. See Chipolini. This can be done by showing that the admissible evidence currently before the court would be insufficient for the nonmovant to meet its burden of proof at trial. See Celotex v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317 (1986). The record must, at all times in summary judgment motions, be construed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant. See E.E.O.C. v. City of Mt. Lebanon, 842 F.2d 1480 (3d Cir. 1988).

Once the movant has met its burden, the nonmovant must present " . . . specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). See Anderson at 248. It is insufficient for the nonmovant to rest upon its pleadings. See Anderson.

A defendant in an ADEA case can prevail on a summary judgment motion in one of two ways. The defendant can prevail by showing that the plaintiff cannot establish a genuine issue of fact on one or more elements of the plaintiff's prima facie case. See Spangle v. Valley Forge Sewer Authority, 839 F.2d 171 (3d Cir. 1988). Alternatively, the defendant can prevail by showing that there was a nondiscriminatory basis for its actions and by showing that the plaintiff cannot demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact as to whether this basis was merely a pretext for discrimination. Id.

II.

Prima Facie Age Discrimination Claim

To prevail on an ADEA claim, the plaintiff must first make out the three prongs of a prima facie case. Plaintiff must show that he was a member of the protected class, that he was qualified for the position but was rejected and that non-members of the protected class were treated more favorably than he was. See Roebuck v. Drexel University, 852 F.2d 715 (3d Cir. 1988) citing, McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973). While Roebuck was a race discrimination case, the standards of proof under ADEA are the same. See Roebuck.

Appendix C

In the case at bar, the plaintiff has failed to establish one element of the prima facie case; that non-members of the protected class who were in comparable positions were treated more favorably than he was. The motion must therefore be granted and the case dismissed.[1]

As to the first criteria, there is no dispute that plaintiff was a member of the protected class. In connection with the second criteria, in the context of establishing a prima facie case, plaintiff has presented the Court with sufficient information to show that he was qualified for an upgrade. William C. Scalia, Mr. Martin's supervisor, wrote on a performance evaluation form dated October 24, 1985, "Andy has achieved his potential. I do, however, believe his current position should be upgraded to XV." Brief In Opposition To Defendants' Motion For Summary Judgment, May 1, 1989, Exhibit G. Under the word "Approval" that document is signed by three additional people; M. Marcus, Vice-President of Human Resources, J. Sichel, Executive Vice President and Chief Financial Officer, and L.D. Horne, Chairperson and Chief Executive Officer.

Furthermore, Mr. Scalia testified at his deposition that he recommended Mr. Martin for a promotion. Deposition of William C. Scalia, October 20, 1988, p. 49, lines 10-12 in Exhibits to Brief In Support of Defendants' Renewed Motion For Summary Judgment, Volume II, Exhibit 22.

1. Because the Court finds that a prima facie case can not be met, the Court will not address whether the defendant has successfully rebutted a presumption of discrimination by presenting a nondiscriminating reason for the failure to upgrade the position. See Roebuck. The Court will also not address whether plaintiff has shown that any non-discriminatory reason was just a pretext. Id.

Appendix C

The defendants have presented various evidence to rebut this information. For example, Mr. Scalia testified that the performance appraisal was not a formal recommendation for a promotion. Id. at p. 47, lines 6-10. In summary judgment motions, however, courts do not weigh the evidence. See Anderson. Rather, all inferences and doubts must be construed in favor of the non-movant. See City of Mt. Lebanon. For that reason and in light of the evidence noted, the Court finds that the plaintiff has established a prima facie case with respect to Mr. Martin's qualifications.

Mr. Martin has not, however, shown that non-members of the class were treated more favorably than he was. Neither Roebuck nor McDonnell Douglas Corp. explicitly state that non-members of the class who were treated more favorably must have been in comparable positions. Both cases, however, recognize that the precise elements of a prima facie case will vary in different factual scenarios. Here, in the context of a failure to upgrade a position, the plaintiff must show as part of his prima facie case that the non-members were in comparable positions. See Epstein v. Secretary, U.S. Dept. of Treasury, 739 F.2d 274 (7th Cir. 1984). Cf. Kunda v. Muhlenberg College, 621 F.2d 532 (3d Cir. 1980) (in a case involving failure to grant tenure to a woman based on sex discrimination the plaintiff must show that comparable males were granted tenure).

Mr. Martin's counsel has claimed that two non-members of the class, Mike Oravec and Janet Malcolm, were upgraded from Grade 14 to Grade 15. Counsel further claims that Ms. Malcolm supervised two employees while Mr. Martin supervised four. As support for these claims, counsel cites to portions of Mr. Oravec's and Ms. Malcolm's depositions. However, neither the deposition transcripts in toto nor the pertinent sections of those transcripts have been provided to the Court either on this motion or on the previous motion for summary judgment. These depositions are simply not part of the record before this Court. The plaintiff's bare citations to the depositions do not place before this Court evidence which would be admissible at trial and, therefore, cannot be considered. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56. See G.C.S., Inc. v. Foster Wheeler Corp., 437 F.Supp. 757 (W.D.Pa. 1975). Since they cannot be considered, there is no evidence before the Court to find that the last prong of the prima facie case has been met.

Assuming, arguendo, that this information was before the Court in the form of competent evidence, Mr. Martin still could not prevail. He has failed to show that Mr. Oravec and Ms. Malcolm's positions were comparable to his. The threshold set is not stringent. The Court does not require a showing that the positions were identical. Nor does the Court require a showing that they were substantially the same. The Court merely requires a showing that they were comparable. The bare statement that Ms. Malcolm supervised half the number of people that Mr. Martin did is insufficient to meet this requirement. In the absence of a showing that the non-members of the class who were treated more favorably were in comparable positions, or similarly situated, the prima facie case has not been met. See Jalil v. Avdel Corp., No. 87-5538, slip op. at 15 (3d Cir. May 4, 1989).

Mr. Martin has not established all of the elements of a prima facie case. For that reason, summary judgment in favor of the defendants will be granted.

ORDER

IT IS on this 14th day of June, 1989, ORDERED that defendants' motion for summary judgment is granted.

APPENDIX E — PLAINTIFF'S ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES

[Question]

9. Do you claim that any declarations against interest were made in connection with the subject matter of this case?

[Response]

9. Yes. In 1971, I was given a $3,600.00 bonus check. That amount represented only a $600.00 increase over the previous year's bonus; however, it should have been a 100% increase to $6,000.00 as per the bonus plan then in effect. When I asked L.J. Sichel why my bonus was deficient, he told me that it was necessary to motivate my two subordinates to a better performance. Therefore, he deemed it necessary to reduce my bonus for the benefit of my two subordinates. These individuals were in their early 30's. In a letter, W.C. Scalia wrote to me "I don't expect you to work like a kid looking for a promotion, but I do expect you to help me and protect me. . ." On another occasion, I was told by W. C. Scalia that it was necessary for the Company to pay the younger employees better and reward them with more benefits so that they would stay with the company whereas it was not necessary to offer me the same wage and benefits scale since there was less likelihood that I would leave the company. Also, L.D. Horne state that my "chemistry" was not right for his "team". This is noteworthy in light of the fact that no one over the age of 39 was hired for his "team", thus, evidencing a discriminatory classification system. I had a conversation with M. Marcus when I was called to his office. Mr. Marcus asked me my exact age and when I responded, Mr. Marcus stated that "maybe we can work something out to make things right for you because I don't blame you for being dissatisfied." Additionally, in a 1980 performance appraisal, W. C. Scalia stated that "despite his age, he (the Plaintiff) continues to work as hard as ever, putting in extra hours as necessary to get the job on hand completed." In February of 1982, W.C. Scalia called me into his office to discuss the removal of the payroll responsibilities from my job function to transfer it to P. Amendolair. Mr. Scalia said "I've got to do something for Pete" meaning he had had discussions with Amendolair wherein Amendolair indicated he was going to leave the company without further advancement. Mr. Scalia justified his actions by stating that in his opinion, the Mennen Company did not discriminate against older employees but rather merely treated younger employees more favorably so that they would not leave the company.
